Kalamazoo College
Boiling Pot 1993 — 1994
Kalamazoo MI 49006
In high school we tended to put people into groups - "stoners, preppies, black, white, skaters, hippies, straight, gay, rich, poor, liberal, conservative, nerd, geek, etc. etc. etc." In college, however, we begin to become aware that these old stereotypes aren't 100% true. We realize that we can't just shove people into different categories because they never fit exactly into any one category. We also see how people can change. The guy who we placed in a "preppy" category in high school may have become a "hippy" in college or vice-versa. Clearly people are much more complex than we realized. It may be hard for some of us to deal with this realization. It is always tempting to simply lump people together into convenient and therefore disposable units. Complexities out of sight, complexities out of mind - life stays simple.

Such an attitude is wrong. People are not just parts of groups, they are individuals. Each person is unique. Each is a conglomeration of little pieces of everything she or he has ever experienced. We have all heard the cliche that people are like snowflakes - no two are the same - but this is so true. Even individuals who look almost exactly alike will have different fingerprints. Just look at the signatures at the beginning and end of this book. No two are exactly alike. Each signature represents a unique individual with ideas and attitudes combined in a unique way to create a unique personality.

Here at K-college I have had the opportunity to get to know so many different individuals. And I have learned so very much in the process. Whereas before I might have called everyone "snow", now I try to look at each individual "snowflake" to discern the unique patterns there. (No, I am not trying to say that you are all flaky!) I try to look beyond what the person wears, or what "groups" they belong to, and try to understand them as a unique individual, deserving of my respect for their individuality. I may not agree with all of their ideas or attitudes but I must recognize their right to their own opinions and lifestyle. I must also recognize that just because they belong to certain groups of friends or organizations that it doesn't necessarily make them any better or worse than me. Furthermore, just because they may have, for example, different political views than I, it doesn't mean that we might not have other interests in common. People are complex. If you take a closer look they may surprise you.

We all use stereotypes in our society. However, we must always remember that behind every stereotype lies a unique person, who deserves to be treated as such and whose individual qualities will undoubtedly transcend the borders of any generalization we try to place upon them. Next time you are tempted to generalize or stereotype someone, take a closer look: please remember the Snowflake, the Fingerprint, and the Signature.

Sincerely,

Heather Carstens

Hermeneutics. The Politics

Human beings, when perfected, are the beast of animals, but without guile, of their wrong-doings, and they are,

equipped at birth, with some, meant to be used by intelligence and sacrifice,
which they may use, for the worst ends.

On Land and Sea

During Land Sea, a 2-3 week outdoor adventure, freshmen, led by Tom Bremsau, hike, canoe, and climb their way through Killarney National Park in Ontario, Canada. A 3 day sail aboard the Toronto Brigantine completes the trip. The students also experience the "Scat". Each student tests their self-sufficiency in the woods for 48 hours. This year several groups met wildlife up close and - apparently a black bear wanted to go on Land Sea too.
