Hardly a week ago, we were gathered in Dalton Theatre as part of the Alumni's "Farewell and Forever" program. At that time, I made mention that I would have served on occasion to be before you to honor you and to congratulate you. Today, I have come to the end of my run—a phrase that has an appropriate ring to it as Acting President.

In my remarks of last week, I said I would not be surprised if Kalama Zoo College looks back and recognizes the Class of 2005 as the class of our most engaged learners of recent history. I spoke of your arrival to campus shortly after the tragedy of 9/11, and your ability to become engaged with college life through the four-year experience. You endured a nation going to war. You became enmeshed with complex and challenging ideas, and with the extraordinary guidance and caring support of your faculty, you built knowledge from challenges.

Unlike the vast majority of college graduates of 2005, you were asked to explain your government's actions while still abroad. And through being challenged, you became engaged in and welcomed by another culture.

You entered your senior year with campus facilities adjusted to accommodate the building of the new Upjohn Library Commons. Nonetheless, you became engrossed with your SIRs and your comprehensive exams. And you did so with great success.

I do not know how history will record about the Class of 2005. To me you are a most special group. You are not your one and only class of graduating seniors. You are my coffee kickoff.

The last of my duties today is to give you, the Class of 2005 the "Charge"—formal instructions about our duties or responsibilities. But I ask, who in their right mind is going to take formal instructions from someone whose first job right out of college was being a commissar librarian working on the Atlantic Ocean? My second job motivated by the desire to eat something—anything—other than fish, was as a carpenter's apprentice at $3.25 an hour. These are hardly the credentials of one qualified to state duties and responsibilities at your graduation.

Should you think that over my thirty-three years of being at Kalama Zoo College, qualifies me to deliver the "Charge," then, those of you that have asked me what I intend to do when President Edith Wilson-Okayama begins her duties as our 17th president know that my response has been, "I want to grow up to be a painter." This goal gave Dean of Libraries and Information Services, my dear wife, Lisa Palchick, the shivers.

I have included Georges Braque, painter and rather in cubism, is credited with saying, "Engagement with lifelong learning is your nail.

So, Class of 2005, you are released from having to be a "Charge" from the 16th and its president. Besides as I review your record, you do not need a charge. You are engaged learners. Your Kalama Zoo College degree certifies that you already practice and are skilled and engaged in constructing knowledge—not simply receiving it.

You already practice the engagement of promising and of honoring those commitments to your family, friends, faculty, and classmates.

You already practice the engagement of becoming engrossed, enmeshed, and interconnected with ideas building a personal relationship to learning.

You already practice the engagement in being occupied, enthralled, or otherwise involved in service to others.

Georges Braque, painter and father of cubism, is credited with saying, "Painting is the nail to which I fasten my ideas." Following Commencement, I thought I would further explore his approach to making a life.

Engagement with life-long learning is your nail. In the years, following Commencement, I look forward to seeing your masterpieces.

Remember, when you were a little kid, how you would come home from school and your mom or dad would invariably ask you, "So, what did you learn today?" Back in elementary school, those questions were always easy to answer, because there was such a wide array of knowledge out there with which we were unfamiliar. I learned that George Washington was the first president; we could tell our parents, thereby constituting them that their private school tuition or public school tax dollars were going to good use.

When you get to college, though, the answer to that question is usually much more complicated. I mean, "Today I learned that there are a number of different opinions regarding the ideal role of the World Bank is setting a fair trade agenda" just doesn't quite sound as good as those solid, unassailable assertions about George Washington. Anyway, if you ask any given college student what they learned on any given day, an honest response is not necessarily going to be of an academic nature. If you ask a college kid what they learned that day, you naturally run the risk of getting a response along the lines of, "I learned not to chase tennis with Miller Lite, or why pigs and wigs are..." well, you get the point.

Today, though, our friends and family members are assembled here celebrating your graduation, and so it makes sense that we should let them know the facts that our collegiate journey has borne. And so, I'd like to take this opportunity to talk about a few of the things that many of us have learned here at K.

We learned: the absolute truth of the old adage that religion, money, and politics ought not to be discussed in civil discourse. And then we reveled in reading, "I have to take a break, no matter how overloaded you are with work.

And we learned, finally, that fear and doubt regarding the future can never dissuade us from living our lives. We first set foot on this campus as college freshmen four years ago, as the horrific specter of September 11th loomed large over America. We are a class forged in the fires of uncertainty, taking our first steps into a real world that has shifted before our very eyes.

And yet a funny thing happened during our college careers. Even as we took an interest in the changing nature of our world, we continued to try—well, college kids. We competed viciously on the athletic fields, we studied hard in the classrooms, we played hard on weekends. We learned that even in the face of horror, tragedy, and uncertainty, certain absolutes in life remain immutable. We grounded ourselves in faith, friends and community even in times beyond our control shifted the world around us.

In the end, learning at K took place both inside and outside of the classroom. We learned in our dorm rooms, through debates on our campus newspaper, through our travels to countless parries, through our relationships with one another. We may have come to Kalama Zoo College for its educational reputation, but our education stuck up on us in places that we hardly expected.

As we move forward, many of us will pursue further formal educational opportunities. Yet we ought to always remember that educational potential manifests itself in every facet of our lives. Hogel said we are learning artifacts—the human being is it impossible not to learn. As college graduates, we must embrace this ever-present learning potential and apply our classroom knowledge to our less obviously pedagogical passions.

The facts of our K College learning will fully ripen if—and only if—we recognize and embrace our omnipresent learning potential.

Thank you.

Monkapult

Monkapult 2004 is Taras Berezowsky, Caycye Klepper, Betsy King, Zoe Marshall-Rashid, Tyler Greene, Christopher Froseth, Paul Whitehouse, Emily Harpe, and Steven Yeun. These nine individuals came together this year to form the self quoted, "Most Powerful Faction on the Kalamazoo College campus" (only a joke of course). These Monkapulers are on a quest to achieve improvisational greatness and also to show the Kalamazoo College campus the joy of improvisational comedy. As a legacy that has been started more than ten years ago, Monkapult has seen its days as just an infant in the mind of one individual to a full blown adult in the hearts of many. The troupe still continues to grow to this day as old members move on and new members are inaugurated. One phrase to describe Monkapult: “Do you realize what you have just joined? Bra Fitting!”

Benjamin,

We adore you, we admire you, and we dare you! Yes, son, we dare you to continue your journey with relentless passion and the burning desire that will be required to bring your life-long dreams within your grasp.

We are as very proud of you and the commitments that you have made that bring you to this summit—your graduation from KIT. Ben, we expect you to reach higher yet for YOU are destined for greatness.

Dare to be different and always be true to yourself. Take a stand for what you believe in and DO FOR IT...DO IT ALL!! And never ever settle in the path of least resistance.

Grace and Peace be with you, Ben, as you embark on your next adventure.......

Congratulations, Benjamin!
With All Our Love

Ben,

It seems only days since we were little, running around the farmhouse, being pests to mom. Now, things are different...You’re graduating from KIT! WOW——

Congratulations! I’m so proud of you for sticking with it!
Ben, no matter what you do, I’ll support you in your dreams, ideas and life. I’m always here for you!

Congrats & all my love,
Your lil sis,
Elizabeth R. Dell

Holly,

You have amazed us with the way you’ve handled your out-of-state internship and study abroad experiences. You’ve grown so much these past four years, volunteering has really brought out the passion you have in helping others. We are honored to be your family

Love,
Dad, Mom
and Heide

Our Dearest
Racheal,
You dance like no one's watching.
You sing like no one's listening.
You love like you've never been hurt.
You live life to the fullest and for that we shall always admire you.

Love,
Mom and Daddy

Ashley,
Congratulations on becoming a member of the 1000+ Club, Women’s Basketball 2001-2005, and four great years at "K".

Love,
Mom, Dad and Jessica

Austin,
Looks like you are ready to take on the world.
You have always looked forward to new challenges and given them your best. Your self-confidence and your awareness of what is truly important to you is remarkable. Wherever the future brings you, we know that you will take it on with the same determination and hard work that you have been taking on challenges all of your life. We are extremely proud of you and look forward to sharing in your new adventures, wherever they take you.

Love you,
Dad, Mom and Ross
