African Studies at Kalamazoo College

by William F. Pruitt,
Director, African Studies Program

African Studies is one of the things that is happening at Kalamazoo College. It is happening because many of the students are interested and enthusiastic and involved. Africa has come alive for them during their period of foreign study. Or they are about to leave for six or nine months of study in an African university. Or some of their friends have just come back or are about to go. Or they realize that Africa's culture and history are important to the culture and history that developed in America, and that ideas and actions in present-day Africa should be important to present-day Americans.

Of course no academic program runs on student involvement and enthusiasm alone. The recognition that Africa is an area of legitimate academic concern developed very early at Kalamazoo College. In fact, it was probably the first college in the United States to institute courses on Africa aimed specifically at the undergraduate. This occurred in 1961 when John Peterson '54 joined the History Department and began teaching courses in African history with the approval and encouragement of the faculty as a whole and the administration. Dr. Peterson had spent a year in Sierra Leone doing research. He arrived at the College at a time when the Foreign Study Program, established through the generosity of the S. R. Light Fund, and directed by Dr. Richard Stavig, was expanding and developing more academic opportunities for students overseas.

Through Peterson's contacts in Sierra Leone, the first group of five "K" students were to study at Fourah Bay College in 1962. This was the first time that such an arrangement had ever been developed between an African and an American college. From 1962-1969, exactly 100 students have gone through the Foreign Study Program to African universities, and this September, 39 more (the largest single group) left to study in Fourah Bay College and Njala University College of the University of Sierra Leone, Cuttington College in Liberia, the University of Ghana at Legon, the University of Ibadan in Nigeria, and the University of Nairobi in Kenya. Though the African group is only a small part of the total Foreign Study Program at "K" College (over 2,000 students have now gone overseas since the program was instituted), it is the most unique in that no other institution in the United States has any program with comparable scope and depth. This fact was recognized by the Great Lakes Colleges Association which designated Kalamazoo College as its agent-college for English-speaking Africa. In the last two years, 15 students from other GLCA schools have gone to Africa through the "K" program. Most of the student participants have been white. This year 10 of the 39 students are black. All 39 survived a stiff selection process.

It is this background of a long-developed curricular commitment to African subject matter and the unique opportunity for a significant number of students to study in Africa that has led to the development of an inter-disciplinary African Studies Program on campus during the summer quarter.

Though African-content courses are offered throughout the academic year, many courses are now concentrated during the summer quarter when students from other GLCA colleges can participate. Courses have been offered this summer in history, economics, political science, anthropology and sociology, literature and the neglected languages, taught by faculty whose primary research interest is Africa or who have added an African background to their previous interests. The majority of the students in all of these courses will not or have not had the opportunity to study in Africa. Those who have been in Africa, and the few (too few) African students on campus, add an invaluable perspective to class discussions and keep the professors on their toes. Within the past two years, we have had three visiting African professors giving courses as a part of our regular curriculum: Dr. Ralph Taylor-Smith (chemistry) and Dr. Edward Fashole-Luke (religion) from Fourah Bay College, and Dr. Bolaji Akinyemi (political science) from the University of Ibadan.

But regular course offerings in the curriculum... are only a part of the activities of the Summer African Studies Program. The Program is an attempt to involve as many students as are interested (and more become interested each year) in an intense learning experience centered on Africa in and out of classes. Outside of classes there are a weekly lecture series, a weekly film series, a campus visitors program, many social and cultural activities centered on African dances, music, art exhibits and meals, an orientation program for those going to Africa, and living arrangements which group together those students who are participating actively in the Program.

The campus visitor and lecture series provides (Continued inside)

an important focus for much of the discussion and stimulation in the Program. A different scholar, usually of international reputation in African Studies, is on campus for at least two days each week of the summer quarter. He is issued an invitation because of his known interest in and ability to communicate with undergraduates. And he is warned that the invitation involves merciless exploitation of his expertise while he is on campus. He (or she) is housed in a guest-room in one of the dormitories, eats all his meals with students, presents one formal lecture to which the public is invited, and spends all the rest of his time being challenged, questioned, and drained of information by the students. Without exception, the visiting scholars have expressed their enthusiasm and surprise at the knowledge and background of the students here, and particularly for the spirit and quality of faculty-student relationships that is in marked contrast to that found in most other African Studies programs in America today. After each lecture there is a coffee and discussion period with the speaker where he defends his position and acts to comments from our students and the growing numbers of participants from the town of Kalamazoo. As Tom Francis, president-elect of the Student Commission, who studied at Fourah Bay and is writing his senior thesis as an economics major on Nkrumah's economic policy, has said, "The opportunity to get to know, informally, scholars of the caliber brought into the Program, is really unparalleled for undergraduates anywhere in the country."

The weekly film series has also provided opportunity for lively interchange of views and continual learning. Each evening of films on a given topic or country is followed by a time for rebuttal or further discussion of the films by African students. The forty or so African students who live in town (most of whom attend Western Michigan University) have been invaluable as voluntary discussants and source people.

Interest in African languages has been developing rapidly as the students learn the importance of foreign languages in breaking through the barriers of a culture. Three levels of Swahili are taught as credit courses in the Neglected Languages Program with assistance from two students, Raphael Munavu and Peter Gukiina. Student-initiated non-credit Free University courses are offered in Krio and Yoruba, with tapes and materials provided through the NLP. Students have also discovered that English, though it is an international language, is influenced strongly by the culture in which it is spoken, and in a real sense there are many different English languages spoken around the world today.

One of the biggest difficulties we have found in the Program is finding lecturers who combine knowledge of African and Afro-American material. The College is now offering courses in the Afro-American experience in several departments, including history, literature, and sociology, but we need more development of these courses to discuss the African heritage in America, a new and exciting academic field.

Black American students here at Kalamazoo as elsewhere on university campuses across the nation are rightfully saying that they and white American students should have the opportunity to study about Africa and the African heritage in America. This does not mean that they will all have the time or the desire to take courses on Africa, but they should be able to make the choice and a liberal arts curriculum should be enriched by having the choices available.

The African Studies Program has generated student enthusiasm because it is intellectually exciting, it crosses disciplinary lines, it attempts to integrate classroom work with the wider co-curricular and extra-curricular life on campus. Most important is the forum it provides for integrating the off-campus Foreign Study and Senior Independent Project experiences with the return to the campus. It capitalizes on the growing knowledge and interest of those who have been to Africa and spreads the impact of their experience throughout the student body.

Shirley Thompson, a senior history major who studied at Fourah Bay and is writing a children's book on an African hero, has commented, "When you study cultures with values different than your own, you begin to be aware of how limited your own experience has been — and more aware of how many diverse cultures there are even in the United States." Gayane Babayan, a biology major who studied at Njala University College, did most of the work of coordinating the program this summer as Assistant to the Director. She begins a two-year term with the Peace Corps as a science teacher in Kenya this fall. She feels that, "The African Studies Program is the focus through which you can bring to bear your concerns for a world beyond your own experience — the wider society."

Planning is going forward for this fall's 31st Annual Fund. Accepting the chairmanship for this year's drive is William J. Lawrence '41.

Dr. Laurence Barrett, professor of English and former Dean of Academic Affairs, has accepted the post of president pro tem at Oakland City College, Oakland City, Indiana, for the academic year, 1970-71. He has worked with officials of Oakland City College during the past year as an educational consultant. He has been granted a leave of absence from Kalamazoo College and will leave for his new post in early September.

Two Kalamazoo College publications were awarded Special Citations by the American College Public Relations Association at the ACPRAs annual conference held in Denver in July. The "Kalamazoo College Review" and the College Catalogue were cited in the ACPRAs Publications Leadership Program. The "Review" was one of eleven magazines selected for recognition. Among others were the University of Chicago, George Washington University, Notre Dame University, and Simmons College. This is the second time that the "Review" has been selected as one of the top publications of its type in the country. Marilyn Hinkle, Director of Alumni and Public Relations, is the editor of the magazine and directed the production of the Catalogue.

Mrs. Paul Collins served as copy editor for the Catalogue.

The faculty of Kalamazoo College has given its approval to a political science course for the fall quarter of the coming academic year which will include three weeks of campaign field work coinciding with the November elections. The course, titled Political Science 175 — Practical Political Behavior, will be open to all students except freshmen. According to Dr. Elton Ham, chairman of the political science department: "The purpose of the course is to allow students to experience politics in practice in conjunction with the upcoming election in order to study political behavior after first learning basic theories in the fields of voting behavior, party identification, and issue orientation."

David N. Rockhold, assistant professor of religion and assistant to the dean of student affairs, is leaving the College at the completion of the summer quarter. For the next six months, he plans to study and travel in Europe.

John R. McFarland, vice-president in charge of development, served on the faculty of the American College Public Relations Association Summer Academy held at Notre Dame in early August. The Academy was designed to provide a means of achieving a higher degree of professional competence for those engaged in institutional advancement programs.

Dr. Conrad Hilberry, professor of English, was named as one of eight winners of full fellowships for the 45th session of the Middlebury College Bread Loaf Writers' Conference in August. The winners, five men and three women, were all writers of promise who have published at least one book or who have had a book manuscript accepted.

Dr. Harold J. Harris, professor of English, has been elected president of the Kalamazoo College Faculty Senate.

Dr. Donnill Flesch was elected chairman of the political science division of the Michigan Academy of Science, Arts and Letters. Dr. W. Haydn Ambrose, assistant to the president, has been elected to the executive committee of the American Baptist PB Association.

New Dining Hall . . .
See It at Homecoming

The College Union, a $1.5 million addition to Welles Hall, is now fully operable and ready to receive alumni on Homecoming Day. Alumni will dine for luncheon in any room of their preference.

The aim of the College and Saga Food Service in the new dining complex is to de-emphasize the institutional aspects of large dining halls and regulated menus, ultimately cultivating the environment in which students live. On the upper level, the building offers small dining areas where groups can gather for conversation and the sharing of learning experiences. Each attractive area carries out a different decor, suggesting some of the countries in which Kalamazoo College students have studied. Convenience foods, also a major factor in the new dining hall, provide better service and menu variety. Ordinarily, students have a selection of eight to ten entrées at lunch and at dinner.

The College Union facilities are located on the lower level. They include offices for student activities, a bookstore, a snack bar (Rathskeller), lounges, and a game room. This centralization improves in large measure communication between the constituent groups on the campus.

The College is grateful to all those who have contributed to the completion of both the new wing of Welles Hall and the remodeling of the existing structure. Welles Hall is now fully established in the social and academic life of the campus.

The following letter has come from James Tipton, who served as the GLCA Intern in Creative Writing on a one-year appointment.

“A wonderful year at Kalamazoo College! Thank you very much for giving me the chance to work with such energetic and talented students. I found more genuine creativity at Kalamazoo College than I found at the two Big Ten schools where I previously taught. And that’s a school of thirteen hundred students compared to thirty and forty thousand!

“Incidentally, I heard recently that Jan Golden, a freshman last year, recently had a poem accepted by the fine Canadian magazine, Prism International. Several other freshmen published work in national literary magazines during the year: Jim Van Sweden published a poem in Arx; Hal Beiler, Tom Lueck, and Dan Packer each published several poems in Haiku; Al Wilke had a poem accepted by the prestigious Tennessee Poetry Journal; Howard Lawrence had a poem accepted by Sumac; Raphael Munavu had several translations accepted by the important journal, Contemporary Literature in Translation. Sue Gregory, of course, published her book with W. W. Norton and Co.; and she earlier published a section of that in Mademoiselle. Several students developed high quality book length manuscripts of poetry (approximately 100 pages) — Leon Raikes, Jan Golden, Jim Van Sweden, and Kimberly Ridenour.

“At any rate, I was surprised and delighted to find Kalamazoo College not a hotbed of student unrest, but a hotbed of creative energy, optimism, and hard work. It was a good year. A very good year.”

Sincerely,
James Tipton
Sports
by Dick Kishpaugh

The names of the coaches will be familiar, but the alignment will be new and the MIAA competition enlarged as Kalamazoo College enters the 1970 fall sports season.

Ed Baker will be on hand to direct the Hornet football team for the fourth season, and Emilio Velasco will coach soccer for the second year. In cross country, however, there will be a new coach as Rolla Anderson takes over, though of course Rolla is a familiar figure on the staff. Rolla has coached football, basketball, tennis, and golf at various times during his 17-year tenure as Hornet Athletic Director.

For the first time in history, there will be league competition in three fall sports, as soccer becomes an official MIAA activity for the first time. Soccer was started at Kalamazoo College on a club basis and then was granted full varsity status in the fall of 1969, even though there was no MIAA competition last fall. This fall, the MIAA will determine an official soccer champion, and the sport will count towards the league All-Sports trophy for 1970-71.

In football, the Hornets have reason for optimism as at least 18 lettermen are expected to be on hand along with a better-than-average freshman group. Several fine players were lost by graduation, including three-year quarterback starter Gary Armstrong, fullback Mike Schonfeld, and star linemen Lee Belfield, Dick Ohrig, Jim Carlson, and Steve McGuire. A new starter must be found at quarterback, but the problem of finding enough running backs may be eased by some unusual circumstances. Scott Nofsinger was Kalamazoo's top runner in 1968, but then was overseas in 1969, and now has returned for more action. Another back, Ken Calhoun, is returning after a five-year absence.

In general, the coaching staff feels that Kalamazoo's football offense will be adequate but that there will be a real challenge in filling the graduation losses in the middle of the defensive line. Defensive linebackers and deep backs are plentiful, and this group includes 1970 Tri-Captains Herb Brogan, Dan Kerkhoff, and Bill Northrop.

In both soccer and cross country, the personnel situation won't be known until after the squads assemble, but there appears to be plenty of enthusiasm as Anderson and Velasco make plans for the season.

Defensive stars serving as tri-captains of the Kalamazoo College football team are linebackers Herb Brogan, Dan Kerkhoff and deep back Bill Northrop.
